Access the website	User Account Login I as a user would need to access the website, either as a user with an account or as a guest user. As a user with an account, wishing to comment and post on the website, I would need to login or signup by entering my information into the website's login page. Guest User Login As a guest user without an account just wishing to view or lurk on the website, all I would have to do is enter the website.
Access the featured stories & resources	Accessing Featured Stories I as a teacher or general user wish to educate myself on the inequalities between inner city schools and newly developed schools through reading stories provided by teachers at these Regina inner city schools. To do so using the In Our City website, I will navigate to the main page and select one of the many featured stories present on the main page. This will redirect me to their individual forum pages, where I can then view and read their stories. Accessing Resources I as a teacher or general user wish to educate myself on the inequalities between inner city schools and newly developed schools. Using the In Our City website, I will navigate to the main page, with the featured resources and stories, and select one of the many provided links from the featured resources section of the page.
Privatize my information	I as a teacher or general user, wish to hide my information to the public to not explicitly reveal information about my school or area. Because of this I will go into the user profile settings and set my information's visibility to 'private' to the public.
Post a story, view a story, filter posts by topic or type	Post a story I as a general user wish to post a story about an experience I had within my school's environment. It is because of this that I will navigate to the forum's page and select the option to create my own post on the forums. So long as I am logged in and have the correct credentials, I can freely create my post and submit it to the forum for everyone to see. View a story I as a general user wish to view a story I am interested in on the forum. To do so I will navigate to the post I wish to see on the forum's page and select that story by clicking on it. From there the website will redirect me to that story's individual webpage, where I can freely view and comment on that story.

Comment on a story

When I as a user am viewing a story on the forum that either I or someone else made, I can add a comment or reply to other user's comments. I can do so by clicking the 'add a comment' or 'reply' buttons and type out my user response.

Filter posts by topic

If I as a user am interested in seeing posts of a specific type, how I would go about finding these posts is by navigating to the main forum page, and at the top of the list of forum posts I would select the dropdown selections and choose the type of forum posts I wish to view. From there I would click the apply button and the forum list would adjust and filter out the posts I wish to see.

Project Exclusions

- Teacher verification – Unfortunately based on the scope of this project, I feel as though the verification process for Teacher's to prove they are in fact teachers may be too difficult to prove for this project's timeline.
- Depending on capability/functionality of giving roles to accounts, potential future moderation or filtration of negative posts should be in order.
